The Language Training Challenge (‘the problem’)

Towards a Solution

The Next Step

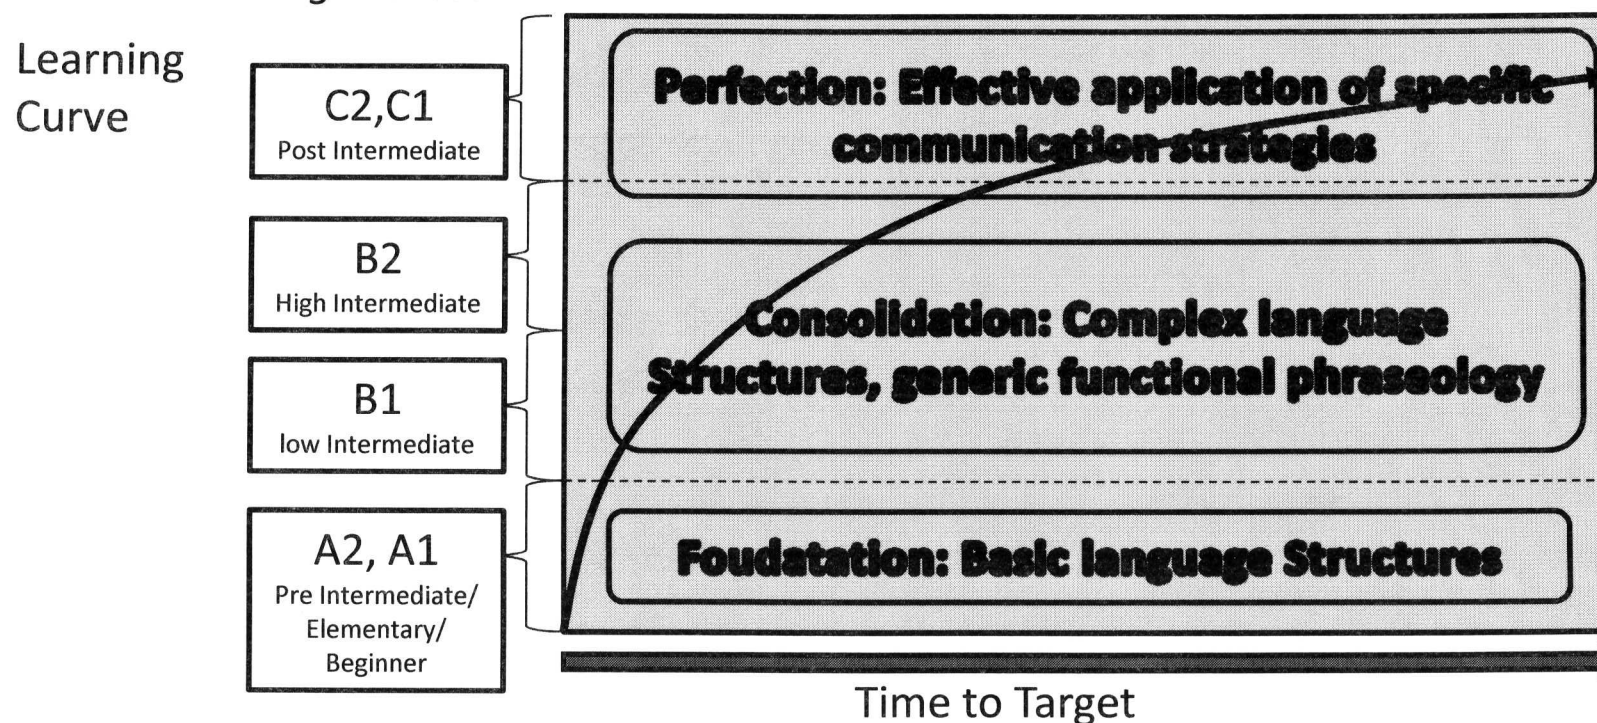

The problem in a Nutshell:

- *Too often, students at intermediate levels and above find themselves following courses that were designed for someone else, or no one in particular.
- Students spend too much time learning things they don't need to know, and not enough time developing the language and skills they really need."

- The Myth of One Measure Fits All:
 - «While standardized courses may meet the needs of the lower levels, at higher levels the specific needs of the learners calls for 'made to measure' training courses.»

- The Myth of One Measure Fits All:
 - «While standardized courses may meet the needs of the lower levels, at higher levels the specific needs of the learners calls for 'made to measure' training courses.»

But...

Also at the lower levels, courses need to be tailored:

- What does the learner really need?
- What context is the learner in?
- What resources does the learner have?

Training Solutions at all levels need to be tailored!

Reflection:

When we design and develop language training programmes, we are NOT selling a language....

We are trying to satisfy a need or resolve a problem...

What is that problem/need?

.....It is simply the the need to Communicate

Towards a solution:

What has Language Solution done over the past two decades in terms of:

- Methodology?
- Tecchnology?
- Specific Training Solutions ?

Methodology

Methodology: NLR – Neuro Linguistic Reinforcement

*From Language to Communication.....
.....and from Communication to Language.*

Methodology: NLR – Neuro Linguistic Reinforcement: Practical examples

Expressing Disagreement:

- Soften disagreement with a sign of respect
- Change 'negatives' to 'positives'
- Separate the person from the problem

NOT "I disagree with you"

Rather:

"I'm afraid I don't agree with that"

Defending 'unexpected' results:

- Don't contradict
- Separate appearance from reality
- Open the door to dialogue

"I agree that at first glance things don't seem so good,Let's take a slightly closer look at..."

Technology

Technology: The Virtual Blackboard

The development of specific functional phraseology is facilitated by the use of a virtual blackboard – an interactive interface which guarantees flexibility.

Technology: ITS – Interactive Training Support

Each course is accompanied by a multi-media support system containing the key elements and language presented, together with interactive practice activities.

Specific Training Solutions

Specific Training Solutions:

We have designed and developed a number of multi-media training programmes, based on the above methodology and technology, for those working in the area of tourism.
